

We hide the clock in these specification will abstracted the real state of the clock and just focus on outside behavior that relate direct to channel communication. By using "data" variable, we could show the content is transferred without show everything about the clock. The result by using data is the same as the original specification of the clock since it use the same communication way but just hiding the details of the clock that do not affect the communication